A Reminder of Augustin Daly in the Revival of "Cinderella at School"-The Travesty and Carlcature of Washington Methods and Men in "A Texas Steer."

The musical section of the Proctor players has moved to the Pleasure Palace with "Cinderella at School." This dainty operetta by J. Cheever Goodwin and Woolson Morse was originally produced at Daly's in March of 1881. That was the second season of Augustin Daly's management of what had been Wood's Museum. The cast seems a queer one for comic opera, including Ada Rehan, Mrs. G. H. Gilbert, James Lewis and Harry Lacy. The piece is nearer like the newest fashion in "musical comedies." really farces with separate songs suitable to the characters that sing them but not necessary to the plot, than the comic operas that were the vogue until recently. In 1894 "Cinderella at School" was reconstructed more on the usual comic opera lines, and under the name of "Dr. Syntax" was produced by De Wolf Hopper. Three of the principals of that east, Bertha Waltzinger, Edna Wallace Hopper and Cyril Scott, are similarly prominent now "Florodora." Mrs. Hopper had just married Mr. Hopper and she and Cyril Scott were new in operetta, coming from such plays as "Liberty Hall," "The Girl I Left Behind Me" and "Sowing the Wind," at the Behind Me" and "Sowing the Wind," at the Empire.

The latest and last section of the Proctor forces to start work is the company that is using "The Woman Hater." David D. Lloyd, who later died from overwork on "The Senator." his best success, wrote "The Woman Hater" for Roland Reed, who used it prosperously. It is in the leading female role at the Fifth Avenue that the best impression is made. Beatrice Morgan, a young woman of striking personality and evident dramatic ability, plays the part excellently. The farce in use at the Twenty-third street Proctor house is "Niobe," produced first in New York ten years ago. The usual complications of a vivified statue cause much laughter. Originally Carrie Turner played the title role, with the talented Isabelle Coe in a smaller part. A row led to the insubordination of Miss Turner, who was not dismissed nor in fact allowed to resign her part. Instead she was reduced to a small character in the farce and Miss Coe was advanced to the leading place.

The borough of Manhattan now has the unusual number of six resident repertory dramatic companies. Soon Terrace Garden will open a season of comic opera with "El Capitan," enlarging the number to seven. Only one of these organizations, the Greenwall at the American, is employed this week in other than farce. The Donnelly players have the best of it in their comic play. Although a little disappointing judged by the Hoyt standard, by any easier measurement "A Texas Steer" is all wool and a yard wide.

Hoyt standard, by any easier measurement "A Texas Steer" is all wool and a yard wide. The Hoyt characterization and humor are there, but the lack of good story, sentimental or otherwise, is an important fault. Mr. Hoyt had the ability to get the atmosphere of any place and people he undertook to filustrate, and yet retain his own individuality in his work. As a picture, or rather a caricature, of Washington political life "A Texas Steer" is the best of the numerous plays on the subject. But twenty more engrossing in subject could be named. The Texas cattle king who is forced into the House of Representatives, declaring that he is "an honest man and what would he want in Congress?" is a delightful creature. His first day in Washington is uproarious, and he has continually to curb his desire to shoot a man. A negro servant of the hotel enters quietly, mysteriously, pulls the curtains over the windows and the doors, and places a screen before the fire place so that no shadows can be cast. Then he announces that a woman has called to see the Congressman. The girl who enters is demure and shy. She is an orphan from Indiana. The Texan tries to console her for the loss of her father, venturing to say that he may be far happier where he is. "Very likely," says the girl, "We always lived in Indiana." But she is a clever lobbyist and persuades the Congressman to help her in a scheme. Still demure, she hesitates about going and finally speaks beavely out. Daniel Webster, she says, once kissed her mother and to her grave she never forgot the honor.

The Innocent young maid also would like once kissed her mother and to her grave she never forgot the honor.

The innocent young maid also would like something to remember. So the kindly old ranchman kisses her, and a little later has to pay $100 for a snapshot photograph of the occurrence.

The progress of the play shows the Texan, after a few months in Washington, presentable and appreciative of good manners. Three delegates from his native State force themselves upon his fashionable dinner party. His wife thinks that if she can make party. His wife thinks that if she can make them drunk they may stay away, but instead they come all the more gladly. Their enthusiasm over their State representative becomes too great for vells, and finally they pull out their revolvers and shoot through the ceiling. In the next act a wounded dinner party from the room above is heard from.

Moore brought out from William G Leland proprietor of the Grand Hotel, testifying yesterday afternoon in the trial of Dr. Kennedy for the murder of Dolly Reynolds in the hotel on Aug. 15, 1898, that a robbery had occurred there that same night Assistant District Attorney Osborne in trying to rebut this testimony elicited from Mr. Loland the statement that the robbery was ommitted on the floor on which is room 85. the one where the young woman was killed and also that the robbery had been reported to Police Captain Price. It will be rememred that when Dolly Reynolds's body was found the contents of her pocketbook had been stolen and an earring had been torn from one of her ears. The work of selecting a jury had been completed before the morning session was over and Kennedy's lawyers, his wife and Dr Samuel Kennedy, his father, expressed hemselves as being well satisfied with the result. Assistant District Attorney O'Connormade the opening speech to the jury, and those who heard it are not sure whether it was meant to be more serious than it sounded. City Draughtsman Towle testified that it the clerk of the Grand Hotel sat at his desk counting money he couldn't have seen a man come down the stairs and could only have seen him by standing up while he was ossing over five or six feet of the corridor leading to Broadway. A clerk did testify in Kennedy's former trial that he had seen a man pass who wore a straw hat filted on the side of the head toward the hotel desk and that the man was Kennedy. The defence holds that with a hat so tilted and at the visual angle presented by the man to the clerk positive identification was unlikely. The trial will continue to-day.

POCO" BENNETT MAY BE TURNED DOWN A Probability That He Will Not Get His Licens to Do Business With Harvard Boys.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 14.—Barney Bennett, the Harvard "Poco" who secured a junk collector's license from the Board of Aldermen against the wishes of President Eliot, Dean Briggs, Prof. Coolidge and others of Harvard University, may not have the authority to buy old clothes from the students this year, for it is quite probable that Mayor Dickinson will not sign the license. This morning he signed all the junk licenses granted by the Board of Aldermen, except the license granted to "Poco". Bennett asked the Mayor as to his position in the matter and Mayor Dickinson said he did not intend to sign the license just now.

It is understood that the Mayor sides with the views of Harvard University as voiced by President Eliot, Dean Briggs and others. The contention is that Bennett has been in the habit of charging exorbitant rates of interest to students to whom he has lent money. Prof. Coolidge wrote to the com-

ASPHALT FIGHTERS HOME.

PART OF BERMUDEZ CO.'S FOREZ AR-RIVES WITH SOME GOOD YARNS.

Didn't Go Out to Fight, but Learned Better -Did Patrol Duty at Night and Cussed Weather and Grub by Day-Once Captured Enemy's Force-Rum Quelled Revolution.

Twenty-five of the employees of the New York and Bermudez Asphalt Company, who have been guarding the company's asphalt lakes near Guanaco, Venezuela, for more than three months with Winchester rifles, arrived home last Monday on the company's steamer Maraval, and were paid off at the company's Sixth street works in Long Island City yesterday. They were a bronzed set in khaki uniforms and looked more like Regular army men than the employees of a peaceful industrial company.

According to the stories told by the men, they thought when they signed articles to go to Venezuela that the job was a peaceful one, but they soon learned better. They left the Union Stores, Brooklyn, aboard the Maraval on Feb. 2 last and were landed in Guanaco eleven days later. Then they were marched inland to the asphalt lakes, where quarters were provided in a big hut built for the puruniform, a Winchester rifle, fifty rounds of took command of the small army and instructed them in their duties. supposed to do any work on the asphalt beds, but were told to keep a sharp lookout for inquisitive "dagoes." At night the men were told off in squads for sentry duty, each squad teking a tour of four hours. Squads off duty at night slept in their uniforms with rifles and cartridge belts at hand.

Between three and four hundred English negroes from Trinidad are employed in digging the pitch, and the Americans loitered about the lakes during the day, joking with the natives and swearing at the grub and the weather. Several times, they say, officers of the Venezuelan Army, resplendent in gaudy uniforms, visited the lakes on a sort of a tour of inspection. On those occasions Capt. Brackett saw that his little fighting force was a readiness for an emergency call. Although their weapons were concealed during the day, they presented such a businessilke appearance every time any functionary of the Venezuelan Government appeared at the lakes that the visiting officials generally retired with much chattering and gesticulation.

Several times the little army was called into active service. On March 15 word was brought into camp by scouts that a company of Syracuse, which was backed by the Venezuelan Government, intended raiding the lakes that day in force. Rations were given out and care was taken to see that each man carried his full fifty rounds of rife ammunition. The invaders proved to be a surveying party from the rival company, accompanied by a guard. They numbered thirteen in all. They were approaching through the tall grass that surrounds the lakes and stumbled into an ambush set by Capt. Brackett. Fight of the invaders threw down their arms and implements and surrendered. They were taken prisoners and marched off to the Bernudez Company's storehouses, while the balance of the remainder of the party. Three others were finally hunted out of the grass and two who were in charge of the party escaped in addition to their prisoners, the army captured the surveying outfit of the party, all their books and maps and arms.

Dempsey received a thrust in the chest that is severe and Osborne's arm was slashed. The two men hurried away and proceeding to Carbondale, swore out warrants for the arrest of Cobb. These warrants were turned over to Chief McAndrew to serve. He enlisted the services of Constable Neary When they reached Cobb's hut, they found it darkened and the doors locked. Cobb's five dogs were at large in the yard, however, and the officers were compelled to fight them off as they approached the tumbledown structure.

Neary battered down the rear door and as he was about to enter, was attacked by a dog. He turned to drive it away and pose. Each man was provided with a khaki as he did so, Cobb ran out of the door and made for the woods. Neary pursued and ammunition and big revolvers. Capt. Brackett | fired several shots. Cobb threw up his hands and stopped. The officer approached to grab his prisoner and as he lowered his revolver to do so Cobb brought down his hand, which contained a long knife. He slashed at Neary, making a slit in the officer's throat six inches long. Cobb made off and took to the woods.

Neary was hurriedly removed to the Carbondale hospital, where it was found that the knife had missed the jugular vein, but had cut three small arteries in the neck. Neary's condition is critical.

DEVERY THE CHIVALROUS. The Deputy Commissioner Comes Down Hard on a Cop Who Clubbed Irish Girls.

When woman is the complainant against policeman in Deputy Commissioner Devery's court at Police Headquarters, Mulberry street says in advance that it looks bad for the cop. One of Judge Devery's strong points is his chivalry. There were two women, one of them good to look at and speaking with a soft Irish brogue that is music to Mr. Devery's ear, against Policeman Joseph Cavanagh of the Tenderloin yesterday and they told against him a story of a particularly atrocious attack upon them to which the policeman offered a flimay defence.

Annie Reidy and Margaret Lee, night workers in a Broadway restaurant, were the complainants. Margaret Lee is large and sturdy. Her companion, over whom the big. They go to work at 5 o'clock in the afternoon and don't get through until 3 o'clock in the morning or later maybe. It all depends on the time at which the "night owls" start for home. On the morning of April 24, so the girls said, they were walking up Broadway and Policeman Cavanagh came up to them and called them unpleasant names. He had previously insulted Annie Reidy, she asserted, and for that reason she had asked the sturdy Margaret Lee to walk home with her as a protector.

Margaret Lee told Cavanagh that he shouldn't talk that way to decent girls. Then, she testified, he struck them both with his

The by-laws prolecorate the graves of relatives. Afterward | hibit beer or any liquor being brought into they started for home. The horses drawing the club rooms. He called a special meeting, but the beer drinking element, being in the moving at a rapid rate and were not able to stop in time, and as a result all three carriages were piled up and the occupants pitched out.

All were badly hurt. The worst injured the file

President the President was found on the file. President Bulger returned home to-night from a week's yachting trip. When he learned what had occurred he stamped the entire affair a forgery, and at once retained counsel to prosecute the case. He implicates a member of the club named Kellum, with whom he has been at odds for some time. Kellum denies the charge that he wrote the resignation. The resignation, which had been placed in the secretary's desk, has in the meantime mysteriously disappeared and no trace of it can be found. Bulger will to-morrow offer a reward for its recovery.
